The compass consists of the compass card (Art. 44), one or more magnetic needles firmly attached to the lower surface of the card in a position parallel to the north and south line, and a bowl with a pivot at its center upon which the card turns--the whole being enclosed in the compass box. The angle between the ship's fore-and-aft line and the magnetic needle equals the arc between the north or south point on the circumference of the card and the point of the latter which is adjacent to a certain mark on the inner surface of the bowl (such that this mark and the pivot of the card are in the same plane with the ship's keel line). 54. Variation and deviation of the compass. The variation of the compass at a place is the angle through which the needle is...
